New Home, New Hope

Dunwoody Baptist Church first became acquainted with Stephen Bandela while he was receiving missionary training at The Master's Mission in North Carolina. When Stephen completed his training in 1996, he met with DBC's Missions Council and created a long range plan for a Bible training center in India designed to train, teach and equip Indian nationals for evangelism, church planting and community based self-help projects.

As a result, Stephen and his wife Victoria started the Bethel Bible Training Center in Hyderabad, India. In July 2007, after several years of work in India, DBC brought the Bandela family to the United States with the purpose of working as the Ethnic Outreach Pastor for the local Asian and Indian communities in Atlanta. Since then, Stephen has ministered to the Asian Indians currently attending DBC and has developed an outreach ministry called New Home, New Hope. The mission of New Home, New Hope is to reach refugee families coming into the United States with the Gospel.

Clarkston, Georgia is one of the most densely populated, diverse cities in the United States – home to thousands of refugees from countries across the Middle East and Asia who have left their war-torn countries for a safer, better life in America. New Home, New Hope provides one-on-one evangelism outreach to these refugee families – first by helping meet their physical needs; then by helping meet their spiritual needs through sharing the Gospel.
